Afghan coup pressures US to find Mideast base sites

WASHINGTON — The Soviet Union's deep involvement in the Afghanistan coup has a shock value that could prove beneficial to the United States in several areas, a wide spectrum of military leaders said yesterday.

For one thing, they said, the spectre of Soviet tanks lapping just beyond Afghanistan underscores the reality that the United States has no launching pad for launching military power in the Persian Gulf area.

The Soviet invasion came less than two months after Iranian militants took over the U.S. Embassy in Tehran and held American diplomats as guests. The idea that the United States has been prepared to respond militarily is a critical warning off Iran.

The Iranian crisis spawned a fresh batch of justification papers in the Pentagon for using bases in the Middle East at least a temporary arrangement. Shortly before Christmas, a team of Pentagon and State Department officials convened here to review Middle Eastern countries, seeking permission to use bases.

Washington sources report that Saudi Arabia has given its green light idea warmly, while Korea, Oman and Saudi Arabia have been receptive. No formal agreements have been announced, however.

"We have an expression in the Pentagon that we're going to do what we can that Afghanistan would provide a fresh sense of urgency to search for bases," that every time you get deep into kimchi or Korean spicy cabbage stuff, the Russian idea seems to be getting stronger."

"Afghanistan," said one Navy official, "has nothing to do with the national security of the United States directly. But it raises the question: How far are you going to get there?" It thus helps make the case for finding bases in the Persian Gulf area, he reasoned.

An Army general and Makarai experted the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan dramatized that the president has three fundamental choices when it comes to using military power in the Persian Gulf area. And, he added, "One is to use an extensive arrangement of mili-

ary bases as well. One officer said the idea should be to duplicate the base of Korat in Thailand somewhere in the Middle East.

A second prospective benefit, military leaders argue, is Afghan troops that might be sent to Vietnam.

"It will be interesting," said one general, "to see whether the Soviets occupy cities and lines of communications and leave it to the Afghan army to go after the guerrillas and Afghans to help defend the Vietnamese," "never again" hangover of the American public.

The latter course, he predicted, would prove difficult and force the Soviets to go after the guerrillas with helicopters.

"The American troops pursued the enemy in Vietnam."

The image of the modern Soviet military machine trying to crush the native Marxist uprising would be an expensive one for the Soviets to project to the West, another officer said.

Still another officer theorized that the Soviets wanted to stabilize the infant state, predicting this could end up being stabilizing for everybody in that part of the world.

Gen. Elmer H. Zumwalt, retired chief of naval operations, and neither U.S. rights to bases in the Persian Gulf nor President Carter's plan for increasing the defense budget will keep the Soviets from pursuing other bases.

The United States, Zumwalt said, simply has neither the conventional nor strategic nuclear forces needed to win on the Persian Gulf front in the next several years, even if Carter moves briskly.

And he added, "I don't think the Vietnamese will be able to hold off the Soviets for long."

Detective's actions questioned

'Son of Sam' officer punished

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The Bionic woman whose actions helped spark speculation that David B. Berkowitz, the so-called "Son of Sam" murderer, might have had an accomplice who had concluded several weeks ago without uncovering any such evidence.

Crofts could not be reached for comment because he was on vacation in his squad action in that case.

The detective, Henry Cioatto, has been placed on administrative leave pending a department hearing. Officers on modified assignment do not carry guns or shields and perform mainly clerical duties. Specific charges against Cioatto have not yet cleared departmental chancel that Berkowitz had an accomplice.

One sure point reportedly involved a trip by Crofts to Miami, Fla., to inquire into the killing of a woman known as "Berkowitz" and the late John Carr. The detective reportedly made the trip at his own expense and on his own time, although he is said to have carried with him a letter of introduction from a police supervisor.

Jean Carr, who was 31 years old when he died in 1978, was the son of Sam Carr, a Yonkers neighbor of Berkowitz. Berkowitz, who did not personally know Sam Carr, had referred to the older Carr as his "master" who spoke to him through a dog and ordered him to kill.

LOVE ME, LOVE MY RAT — Kathy Dillon gets driving tips from her pet rat.

Columbus no ordinary varmit

White rodent wins affection of rat-hater

Houston (AP) — Perched on his master's shoulder, Columbus is a white rat leading a dog's life and couldn't be happier.

"He's a great pet and he's wonderful to look at," says Kelly Dillon, who wants to be an animal health technician and admires a longstanding grudge against rats in general.

"I had a behavioral training project (in school) and most of the class used rats except me," she says. "I used a dog. I just couldn't understand why anyone would want to be a rat."

But when a classmate decided to release Columbus in an apartment complex after the project was over, the spunky little rodent had an unexpected audience and his owner dutifully followed Columbus and his brethren.

"Yesterday he was on my sister's shoulder and I came in and he went to my shoulder. Of course, I need him, so he also identifies with Columbus," she says.

However, Columbus is no ordinary rat, and Dillon counts — over 100 — fans. Dillon, 18, Ms. Dillon says, even though Columbus is probably as much of a pain as any other rodent, when you're perched on her shoulder, she says, "I told him I just didn't care."

"It does make a difference," she says. "Lab rats are bred to be beter-natured, intelligent and to stand posture. They are also much cleaner. He washes himself like a rat after I pick him up."

"I think he's been pampered by the above and many people have to take their aversion to rats can be blamed on bad press."

— Kathy Dillon, 18, of Houston, Texas, got Columbus as a gift for a lot of bad publicity from the media and the movie "Willard." Also, I guess rodents traditionally have always disliked rodents.

"Really, they look at him (Curious George) and York." One woman I know rare leaf across the room when she first saw him," she says.

"It's the tail that gets them. It's pretty ugly and gets where it's not meant to go. Columbus is a real pain in the rear. I would be rough."

"It would be lonely, too. A close friend's father recently sold her. It might be difficult to find another family that's interested in keeping Columbus perched on her shoulder."

"I told him I just didn't care," she says. "I mean it's gotten down to a case of love or hate, love my of Waldheim meeting the monarch and leaving the hand of the shah's twin sister when she was representing Iran at the United Nations.

Waldheim and Ghotbzadeh said after their first meeting that their focus on Iran would be to support the shah and the United States. This was in line with the Iranian government's contention that the secretary general's visit to Tehran is to facilitate an American demarche and a press conference of Iranian studies who arrived on Christmas Eve to seek the release of the captives left for home.
