To whom it may concern,

The New York Times has just informed me that David Berkowitz, the convicted killer of six murders, has been sent to the Department of Mental Hygiene.

Mr. Leon Stern, Mr. Berkowitz's lawyer, declares that he "exhibits complete periods of irrationality." Sure, what's to stop him from going off the wall and acting like a crazy. But, when he was asked in court if he knew what he was doing, he replied yes. Running to a car, kneeling down and firing are the actions of a dangerous man. A man like this should be put away for life. He knew what he was doing. And if the correction department deem him

'after a year or so (and what's to prevent him from acting with "complete rationality" thus fooling everyone again) and then release him, think about his threat to society.
Think about the state security, if not the national security, and you tell me if it's correct to send this man to a psychiatric ward for transiency!

I am not alone with my opinions.
Everybody alive feels threatened, after all,
it's his business to kill, isn't it?

Sincerely Yours,
Mark Lane
